I bought Explore Everything-Place Hacking the City by Bradley L. Garret as a gift for my 16-year-old son but it was me who ended up reading it. My kid relishes urban ruins and moody photography, capturing municipal life on film with typical teenage angst. Another son has a passion for history and classical architecture, ancient and contemporary.

The answer to that will be obvious to anyone who has read Place Hacking over the years - exploration is not something you do, it's who you are. I chose to do my research on urban exploration because I was already an explorer, not because it was something I wanted to write about. So no, I will never stop exploring.

Place Hacking
