The 1980s Supercar – Ferrari Testarossa. The Testarossa burst on to the 1980s supercar scene bearing a name that linked it back to the racing 250 Testa Rossa ('red head') of the '50s but it was far from a barebones sports car. Introduced as a replacement for the Berlinetta Boxer, the Testarossa might have been very sporty but its generous dimensions and luxurious interior hinted at it ...

The Testarossa that replaced the Berlinetta Boxer in 1984 was such as successful model that Ferrari retained it throughout the 1980s and half of the 1990s. While it was not the fastest road-going car of its generation and not even faster than its predecessor, the Berlinetta Boxer, it was a sleek, elegant and robust vehicle designed for convenience and comfort.

The 550 Maranello arrived in 1996 to replace the long-running mid-engined Testarossa/512TR range. With a return to a front-engine layout, handling predictability was improved although at the expe nse of outright grip levels and perhaps a bit of visual drama. Still it was a compromise that better suited its role as a long-distance tourer, albeit one that was one of the fastest production cars ...

1992 Ferrari Testarossa Buyers Guide. The 1992 Ferrari Testarossa – or 512 TR – was a faster, more powerful and more luxurious sports car than the previous generation of Testarossas. It was so popular during the early 1990s that everybody wanted one. A notable owner was Sir Elton John, whose 512 TR sold for an astronomical amount in 2013.

Even better for Ferrari, the Testarossa debuted during an economic boom. Sales took off; by 1989, U.S. cars were being sent to Japan at a 100-percent markup above sticker price. By 1991, 7,177 Testarossas had been produced—more than three times the number of Boxers built over a ten-year span.

Over the past three years, as three of our four hot hatches shot up in demand, the Testarossa fell out of favour. The Hagerty Price Guide records that in April 2017 the average value for the Ferrari was £126,350. By November, 2019, it had dropped to £88,200 and in May the freefall continued, with an average value of just £79,200.
