In his book, Leading Teams, J. Richard Hackman shares 5 conditions that must exist to create and maintain effective teams: 1 The team must be real. According to Hackman, a team is not "real" unless the group members have a shared task, clear team boundaries, and stable membership. While the leader can certainly control the first two criteria, it is not always easy to maintain stability on all teams. This is the challenge of leaders in creating a "real" team. 2 Teams need compelling ...
